CONTENTS

The names represent editorial responsibilities for the chapters, rather than true authorship.

PAGE

I. Elusive Leadership—An Introduction. Harold Spears 1

A searching party sets out—the story of Joe Brown of Centerville—The mechanics of the book—Arranging the accounts of leadership—Chapter authors and editorial responsibilities—The leadership pattern—Reading between the lines—The book and the war.

II. Developing Teacher Leaders..... Alice Miel 27

Two ways "to run" a school—The pattern of cooperative administration in Santa Barbara—Teachers help plan a school building in Hartford—Teacher selection of personnel in Ethical Culture Schools, Springfield—Olympia's schoolboard relations committee—Working with the city library in Lincoln—Cooperative problem solving in St. Petersburg—Student-professor planning at Troy Teachers College.

III. How Schools Are Improved..... Alice Miel 49

How several schools have set about to improve themselves—The Manassas Regional High-School program—Reporting the Lexington Lafayette High School—Teacher-pupil participation at Benham—The Leighton Elementary School comes to life—Grand Island incorporates pupils as planners—Groveland School brings interests to life—Community service as teacher education at Troy.

IV. Harnessing Ideas as Leaders..... Alice Miel 67

Provision for instructional leadership in Shorewood, Wisconsin: a school-centered community—The teacher's role in a child-centered school—Parent conferences and student conferences—Student participation in school planning and management—School and community cooperation—A philosophy of leadership.

V. Teachers Organize for Instructional Improvement ..... William M. Alexander 81

Two interpretations of instructional leadership—Instructional leadership by Cincinnati organizations: Council for Childhood Education, Upper-Grade Study Council, a study program in language arts, a joint program in science, a series of workshops—Seattle's school-community relations program—In-service training in Salt Lake City—Democratic procedures in Richmond.

PAGE

VI. School Systems Move Ahead. . . . William M. Alexander 95

A choice of objectives in curriculum planning—The curriculum approach in Boulder—Individual school initiative in Oakland's instructional program—Santa Monica's cooperative science study—Professional courses to meet teacher needs in Seattle and Tacoma—The force of the single faculty in Denver's reorganization—Toward democratic organization in Fort Worth—Cooperating teacher groups in Kansas City.

VII. Necessity Develops Novel Approaches. . . . . William M. Alexander 113

The supervisor as a leader of in-service educational activities—In-service approaches: workshops, excursions, study conferences, clinical and experimental centers, planned observations—Excursions in Santa Monica—Study conferences in Macon—The workshop at Garden City—The Omaha workshop—Inducting new teachers and principals in Denver—Planned observations in La Porte—The Des Moines program of in-service education.

VIII. A State Develops Local Leadership. . . . Harold Spears 139

The course-of-study concept of state leadership—Michigan's state program—Contribution to the development of local leadership—Annual curriculum and guidance conferences—A new type of teachers institute—Child development centers—County demonstration centers—Schoolboard members' meetings—Administrative conferences—The Cooperative Teacher Education Study—The Michigan Study of the Secondary-School Curriculum—The fifty-five cooperating schools.

IX. Three Counties Lead Themselves. . Ruth Cunningham 167

The committee's approach—The Cherokee County program: experiments in working together, long-range planning, community projects—Fayette County's situation promotes a new program—The supervisor views the situation—County institutes give way to new procedures in Vigo County.

X. Leadership thru Teacher Self-Confidence. Alice Miel 187

The concern at Webster Groves—Description of the school system—Teacher security—Teacher initiated organizations—Professional growth—Conferences and conventions—Summer schooling—Freedom in teaching—Selection and orientation of new teachers—Personal growth—Parent-teacher conferences—The integrated high-school program—Developing resource materials—Conclusion.

XI. Institutional Services. . . . . J. Paul Leonard 213

The Ichabod Crane type—Giving teachers experiences as apprentices—Writing documents—Institutional coordinators—Community service at Mississippi State—Providing workshops—Consultancy service at Florence, Alabama—Stanford's service in Santa Barbara—Developing a cooperative school at Evanston thru the Northwestern University school of education.

PAGE

XII. Community Projects.....Rudolph Lindquist 235

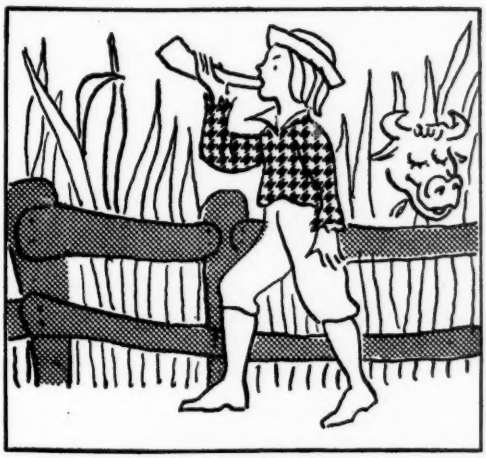
The panel member who was different—The Macedonia Co-operative Community—Education as living—Principles of procedure—A different kind of school—Waterloo, Alabama, moves toward a community school—Community needs—Home improvement as the school's concern—Projects carried out—Live-at-home program.

Acknowledgments..... 243

Leadership That Won't Work

By Mother Goose



Blow Your Horn